Dear <First Name>,

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) first approved laser vision correction technology in 1995, after over ten years of clinical trials. Since its U.S. approval, more than seven million people in this country alone have opted to have laser vision correction. Today, the majority of these procedures are done using LASIK, though there are other options as well.

Is LASIK right for you? There is only one way to know for sure: with a comprehensive LASIK Eye Exam. Find out for yourself today!

LASIK FAQs

Understanding your prescription

Your prescription is critical for determining exactly what kind of laser vision correction is right for you. Your provider should thoroughly measure all aspects of your vision before recommending any procedure. It is useful to bring old prescriptions and glasses with you to the exam, so your doctor can determine how your eyesight has changed over time.

Which LASIK technology will your doctor recommend?

Differences in prescription, corneal thickness, and pupil size may mean different laser platforms will achieve the best outcome. The medical team at LasikPlus will offer you a specific treatment recommendation, along with an explanation of why that treatment is being recommended.
